

In Loving Memory

Shirley's Last Song

Never mind—I will go.
My kidneys will harden to stone
and nothing like blood will enter their doors.
I am ready. Tell your father.

Today I will start the stories.
They will cross back and forth
to heaven, to earth, to home.
Listen closely, I might mention you.

I will begin like this: It's November
and my voice will trail out through grass,
willow, sage, the banks of Antelope Creek,
first fish, a camp, a fire, friends, family.

I will end holding your father's hand,
here, beside this bed. He will lean over slow as a sixty-year story and kiss me,
like that first time. I am ready.
